

The Broad-headed Snake

This snake looks similar to a diamond python- but don't be confused by its markings, this snake is venomous! The Broad-headed snake is a nocturnal snake. It is very fussy about where it makes its home. It only lives amongst the crevices of sandstone rock escarpments with a sunny aspect so it can make use of the sun to warm its body. When it has had enough of the sun it uses tree hollows for shelter. The Broad-headed snake was once common but much of its preferred habitat has been removed and built on. It now only occurs in sandstone areas within a 200km radius of Sydney and removal of its habitat continues to threaten the survival of this beautiful snake.
